“Wyland is a Marine Michelangelo.” USA Today

Aloha,

Back in 1978, I opened my first studio gallery in Laguna Beach, over 40 years later, Wyland Galleries remains one of the most popular galleries in the United States. In 1979, I was a featured artist at the renowned Sawdust Festival in Laguna Beach. Most of my paintings at that time were original oils. I have always enjoyed painting live at the art festival and Wyland Gallery shows. Many of my collectors were fortunate enough to purchase those early originals.

Because of the demand for my original paintings and the limited supply, I am now once again accepting commissions in all original artwork categories. As an added bonus you can order your original commission for the same price as an existing original in the same size and medium. Wyland Galleries has traditionally increased the price of originals ten percent on the first day of every year. Only during the recent recession did I hold the prices on originals. My originals are available exclusively at Wyland Galleries and official Wyland dealers.

For those of you who collect original works of art, this increases the value of your collection. It has been said that buying originals is cheaper when the artist is still alive. If you follow history, collecting art is not only a great investment, but also an investment in the joy of life.

Wyland collectors generally collect eight or nine pieces, including originals. For many, collecting my fine art is often their first time collecting any work of art. Please keep in mind, my efforts are not only about the art, but conservation. My ultimate goal is to leave an art and conservation legacy for my collectors. I encourage you to keep connected to the work the Wyland Foundation is doing in the world and know that every original painting, sculpture, and drawing I do reflects my effort to protect all life on the planet. Art is a very powerful medium, and it continues to inspire a generation to consider what we are doing to ensure a healthy world. I look forward to seeing you at one of the upcoming Wyland Gallery shows. Please check in often at WYLAND.COM and WYLANDGALLERIES.COM.

Best Fishes,

WYLAND

Street Art - Elephant, original oil painting by Wyland

Wyland's oil paintings are collected the world over by corporations, celebrities, museums, and individual collectors who share the artist's commitment for conservation of the world's oceans, lakes, rivers, streams, and wetlands. "The ocean can be an indescribable place," the artist says, "yet through oil painting, I can communicate in a way that transcends words, using color, movement, emotion, and light."

PRICING EFFECTIVE THROUGH DECEMBER 31, 2025

Wyland brings to life some of the world's most unique images using the natural spontaneity of watercolor. The near-abstract effects of his "Underwater Colors" are created using a wet process that summons energy and motion to his turtles, dolphins, whales, and other amazing sea life. The effect is lively, fluid, colorful, and indisputably Wyland.

Wyland with Professor Xikun Yuan in Beijing, China

For over six thousand years, traditional Chinese painting has continually evolved to reflect the changes of the times. Now in the 21st Century, a time of environmental awareness and focus on the state of our natural world, Wyland has adapted the ancient Chinese brush techniques with his own personal style to create a series of paintings featuring wildlife from across the globe. Wyland’s technique has evolved further with his recent work with renowned Chinese artist and sculptor Professor Xikun Yuan during the Hands Across the Ocean project in Beijing.

Bald Eagle, One of Wyland’s original Chinese brush painting for the U.S. Olympic Team.

WYLAND: art | conservation

Internationally renowned marine life artist Wyland is one of the most celebrated and recognized artists of our time. An innovative painter, sculpture, writer, photographer, philanthropist, and filmmaker, he captured the imagination of people everywhere by completing over one hundred monumental marine life murals around the world from 1981-2008. The project, known as the Whaling Walls, remains one of the largest public arts projects in history and continues to be seen by an estimated one billion people each year.

An avid SCUBA diver and world traveler, the Detroit-born artist has been hailed a "Marine Michaelangelo" by USA Today and recognized for his art and conservation efforts by the United Nations and on the floor of Congress. His giant ocean mural on the convention center in Long Beach, Calif., covering over 3 acres, landed him in the Guinness Book of World Records for the largest mural ever painted. Several years later in recognition of Earth Day, he doubled the size of that mural by completing the largest portrait of the earth on earth on the building's three-acre roof -- in only twenty-four hours. In fact, no artist in history has painted more surface area that today is now measured in acres.

His newest public art project, 100 Monumental Sculptures in 100 Great Cities around the world, includes plans to sculpt all the great whale species, as well as endangered and threatened animals from the IUCN Red List. Ten of these monumental sculptures will be underwater. "My art has always been about art and conservation," Wyland says. "I was inspired in the early 70s by Green Peace, the first Earth Day, and from watching my hero Jacques Cousteau's Undersea World television series. I was simply an artist in the right place at the right time in history, and I felt strongly that art could play an important role in bringing attention to environmental issues."

Wyland's early inspiration grew upon seeing the ocean for the first time during a family visit to Laguna Beach, Calif., in 1971, when he was fourteen years old. The sight of a mother and baby gray whale migrating near the shore eventually inspired him to paint those same two whales on a life-size scale on an adjacent building in 1981. After the completion of the mural, he committed himself to creating one hundred ocean murals around the world as a gift to communities. He painted his 100th Whaling Wall mural in Beijing for the Cultural Olympics as the official artist for the US Olympic team. Today, Wyland art is collected in all fifty states and more than one hundred countries. He founded Wyland Galleries in 1978 with his first studio gallery in Laguna Beach where he lives today, and has influenced numerous traditional and street artists, including L.A.-based O.G. Slick. In 1993, he founded the non-profit Wyland Foundation as part of his continuing effort to inspire millions of people to take action to ensure clean water and a healthy planet through art, science, and conservation. The Wyland Foundation has partnered with the UN for the Wyland World Water Pledge to encourage all seven billion people to be water wise.

Today the artist is one of the most collected and appreciated artists in the world with artwork in museums, corporate collections, private homes and more than 100 countries.
